

ALBATROSS

#28

“God save thee, ancient Mariner!
From the fiends that plague thee thus!— Why lookst thou so?”—With my crossbow I shot the ALBATROSS.

ALBATROSS

CONTENTS

| | |
|---------------------|----|
| Richard Smyth | 3 |
| Gale Acuff | 4 |
| Henry Goldkamp | 6 |
| David Rogers | 7 |
| Judith Ann Levison | 8 |
| Mike Dillon | 9 |
| Richard Brobst | 10 |
| Cody Kucker | 12 |
| ayaz daryl nielsen | 13 |
| Jerome Gagnon | 14 |
| Stephen Reilly | 15 |
| Dana Stamps II | 17 |
| Don Thompson | 19 |
| Tim Wolfe | 20 |
| Gary Metras | 21 |
| Vincent Hao | 22 |
| Robert Ronnow | 23 |
| Larry D. Thacker | 24 |
| Contributor's Notes | 27 |

ALBATROSS

#28

Editor: Richard Smyth

Cover art: "Synapse II" by Johgn Timothy Robinson Digital interventions by Roy Parkhurst

"Walking on Water" first published in the October 2015 edition of the online journal poems2go.wordpress.com

Subscription Rates

One issue: $5.00
Two issues: $8.00

Checks payable to ALBATROSS.

Copyright © 2018 The Anabiosis Press ISSN 0887 4239

ALBATROSS accepts submissions of original poetry and black-ink drawings. Please mail all correspondence to ALBATROSS, 2 South New Street, Bradford, MA 01835. We do not appreciate receiving simultaneous submissions and later finding out that poems submitted to us were accepted elsewhere, so please do not do this. Be sure to include a SASE (self-addressed stamped envelope) with all correspondence.

<http://www.anabiosispress.org> <http://albatrosspoetryjournal.wordpress.com>

Walking on Water

Speak of miracles. Speak of defying gravity and all the laws of physics. Speak and be ignored in this age of the explained, the mundane.

Metaphysics, after all, is on the way out.
No God need apply.

Yet we seek to know what the gods know,
the ability to walk across the clouds, and, though grown giant-large — heavy as mountains, heavy as broken bridges — to be light as rain, to be carried like rain in the moving womb of wet air.

The story itself is the doing: the telling a telling of crossing over with the weight of a great burden upon us.

Gum

When Miss Hooker dies, she's my Sunday School teacher, she'll go to Heaven hands down, her soul will, anyway, her body will hang forever back on earth in its grave, I mean her body's grave, the earth's grave is the universe, I guess, and she'll be young forever up there and if I'm good or maybe that's just good enough I'll see her again, I'll go to Heaven, too — even if I don't stay there forever I'll be there long enough for God to pass judgment on me and tell me if I get to stay or if I have to go to Hell for all time and the bad things I've done, whatever those are, including chewing gum in church and swiping candy bars from the drug store and trying to smoke a Swisher Sweet and failing English in regular school and skipping Sunday School class to go fishing in the pond behind the cemetery where one of those stones has my name on it or it will, I mean, one day when I'm gone but still here, my soul shot up to Heaven but my dead body remaining. After class today I asked Miss Hooker if when I die may I please be buried beside her and she said that that was up to me and my family so then I asked her could someone open up her grave and put me still newly dead in there with her bones and after she thought for a moment, I guess she was thinking although she looked like she just woke up, was resurrected even, she said that she'd have to give it some more thought. So I'll see her again next Sunday if I'm not dead by then or she is or we both are and if we both are then we'll see each other there in Heaven at least long enough for me to be judged and sent to Hell. It's like God thinks of everything.

Cous

This is the river dump.
We smell wet, sleep with dogs.

Here vowels have a bum knee.
Them prophets of bad weather.

Collect the cutoff fingers of our uncles, we'd have a full set to bet with.

Gave Ma mastitis straight away.
Savage and Texas near spelled the same.

Born-again so much times I start to feel invincible.
And it a forgiving God up here.

Said you on the other side of the moat now bitch.
He come at me like he holding a hand of dirt.

Was watching my mouth cuz wires just got out.
Wasn't sure if he knew or not my weak spot.

Heard his daddy bit Jerney's lip half-off, them two alone in his single-sounds queer as a turtle in a attic to me.

Not consummating any friendship, not even Bert.
Call me corn cockler cuz I went Crayon to Career.

Sheet metal. I speak complete sentences: Fuck you. Ain't about to fake it.

Onions, Late July

A morning glory opens in the overgrown row of grass
and seedling maples.
The cherry blossoms
all fell weeks ago.
I reach past
tiny trees
find an onion planted in March and pull:
this is the greatest act of faith
I am capable of.

Sail

In Maine I built a small model of the San Francisco Bay so I could sail my little boat there without crossing the desert or going around Africa This was cheating but to breathe is to cheat You did not make the air I was too big to fit in the little boat so I made a model of myself to sail it which I guess was also against the rules
but when I'm anchored near the Bridge and fog rolls in the world shrinks and I do what must be done In tsunamis predictions of scale have little meaning

Maine Childhood

I often dream of the wretched place I call home.
As I age memories lose their protective glow.
Stark, beautiful trees felled in wild succession are determined by the wind and skill of the cutter.

I know the outhouse still stands far from the house, a journey toward the hell of poverty's grim hold.
I ploughed through knee deep snow with bare legs.
The dark was timed as if from a clock inside the moon.

Sapphires glinted over small hills in a pale blue glow, pushing me forward to the crooked door shut with snow, a red shovel beneath it.

Winter Evening

Winter takes shape as a glistening helmet over our house. Trees suffer bandaged with ice. The mail box empty.
Waiting months for his letter, he does not need me.
A shot is heard. Later father is bent dragging a deer carcass.
Soon we will eat blood cooked into gravy.
Mother sings Hank Snow songs as she boils a venison dinner. I gag on meat.
Winter broods in her until she rants like an animal in a cage, smoking, pacing.
Dead now a decade, I still fear her.
She had a way of breaking my life apart, until I received his next letter.

Query

So you've brought down the red tailed hawk with a mere twitch
of the trigger finger.

I wonder if your own return to earth will exhibit such a passionate descent when your full name is called.

Summer Dawn

The stars withdraw silently as the dew has come into its own.

A breeze stirs the thick maple —
a river sound.

Across the field
a dog barks twice and goes quiet.

The first robin carols.
A distant truck changes gears.
Your back turned to the west you stand in a story imperishable as that which survives every war.

Dummy Town, Nevada, 1955

They were arranged in family units:
husband, wife, daughter, son, family dog posed by the fireplace, the television screen in static pattern while mother was tied to the sofa in her new rayon dress.

Her husband,
wired to a fence post,
stared aimlessly
as the sun set into a glow across the desert.

The children were bedded down in the reinforced bedroom, and each of their arms were animated, reaching out
for something unobtainable.
Grasping for something that, even at the last minute, had it been there they would not have recognized.

Killing the Animals

The bulls have fallen to their knees, their eyes, huge and rolling towards man's heaven, muscles quivering beneath the steel shank.

I would like to think that beautiful flowers will crack the earth beneath their blood, bloom in this arena of mud, but they are killed only out of man's infertility.

Whatever power that there is called God, the death of these bulls
will diminish
if there is purpose to any born thing.

Task

If willing it won't fill the feeder, There'll be no more titmice, no chickadees, Though a full bag of seed is in the shed, Right behind the hydraulic car jack wedged In front of the green bin with the summer floats.

Knowing exactly where it is Doesn't make the slightest bit of difference.
And that, my friends, about sums up Why it's been so damn hard to draw The sweet things back to me.

small creatures

next to a burrow on this wooded bluff beside the Mississippi singing hymns of well-being for that which lives within perhaps even a goddess yes, the goddess of some small creatures

prepared

and if the night hawk
calls my name
I will answer,
yes, I will answer

and if the horned owl
calls my name
I will answer,
yes, I will answer

and if the old crow
calls my name
I will laugh, but,
yes, I will answer

yes, thankful
they know me
by name

Looking Out at the Stream which is really not a stream but a dried river bed that we installed last summer, carrying bucketsful of mixed gravel which are really bits and pieces of the last ice age that came rushing out of nowhere in a great, white wave of change,

I noticed that some dried bamboo leaves on the ground resembled little canoes piled up on the imaginary shore, and then forgot all about it until now, trying to make something more of it, of the mind's preoccupation with metaphor, of the need to know, to explain the inexplicable — the world as it is.

Grateful for failing that, again.

Return to Bamboo

— for Bill McCallum (1951-2004)

We spent most mornings mowing the lawns and cutting back the frost-burnt bananas along a winter waterfront of homes.
Currents of canals drifted brown from Okeechobee. I laughed at myself, watching the heron's blue flight with snow-bound eyes. My hands broke out with blisters, the work unfamiliar to my touch. But the work was always hard and good, well worth its day of sweat.
Shaking off the hibernation of my life indoors, I swore I could hear your bamboo grow, the papayas sweetening the evening breezes from the Atlantic. But now, you write to say a hard frost burnt the bamboo dead brown in sand, the papaya stalks like shriveled fingers, and the northwest winds are pushing south promises of new fronts. This is it for you: no more papayas. You've listened to the palms cackling like old women with every gust and have dreamed of flamingos shivering blue.
Dear friend, I write back in this, a dead cold — that ain't no cliché. Nights frozen morgue stiff.
These words wrapped in wool and long johns.
Even the power lines crackle complaints as another Arctic Express trucks down from the polar cap. Man, it's too damn cold for me.
Nothing unusual, says a Minnesotan, and another from Maine measured snow in layers like sandstone. They laugh when I envy the Canadian geese migrating to the warm marshes along the Gulf. Tonight, I feel as comfortable as an egret alone on an ice floe and want to tell the starlings, the sparrows huddled on my windowsill, that I understand. It's a matter of degrees.

Pebbles Down a Well

1.

The crabber throttles down, sliding a small wake beneath the interstate bridge, commuter traffic above him shuttling to and fro.

Some scent on the river says the blues are on the move.

A hundred thirty-two traps to bait by noon.
Better than life on the hill dry-docked.

2.

Armadillos root among the palmettos.
Grackles grackle among the palms.

Fire ants freckle the sugar sand.
The men, named and unnamed, are gone, buried; their dock rotted, sunk to the bottom of the river long ago, when your daddy's daddy was just a boy.

Their work and lives sweat without equity.

3.

Here, high on this hill, let us pray, and let the mullet leap without meaning.

Let the osprey roost atop a dead gray pine and the alligator sun its appetites warm on its bank.

Timeless as this tide runs out.

Pacific

— for Kortni

Alone, on the sea just off Catalina, there is a sailboat tacking in the autumn wind. Crafts afloat can resemble butterflies in the brush, look like Calder mobiles, or a surrender flag. The sound of Aum fills my life, which is my body, which is an ocean.

Along the cliffs

of Highway One, along the coast between Santa Barbara and San Francisco, you can park and see what others have disregarded (they set their tripods up in rows elsewhere). As the sun submerges, see what the ocean has to tell, this dusk, this destination. Wait until the moon, Jupiter, Venus, and Mars, and the stars are all that's light.

No reason to rush, none at all. Tides go on, nature goes on. A poem is an ocean.

Distinguish the Sun

The drive is long from city skyscrapers, miles away from light pollution, civilization into constellations, gazing into a friend's telescope in pitch dark, the night still chill before summer.

The distance of Proxima Centauri or a red smudge, a galaxy on a deep range photograph from Hubble, inspires countless. Stars hide during the shine of Sol as shadows become thin and the yellow blaze defines day, and only eight minutes away at light speed.

Solar Farm, Morris Road

Sunlight's not a zero sum game.
It's endless, more so than air — or even time, although mine is running short.

Everything in this place glitters, except a heap of burning tumbleweeds that will smolder for days and hundreds of black mirrors hoarding light in their darkness.

Alkali dust like frost glitters on the rutted, dirt road; so does water drying up in an overgrown pond.

Two ducks panic when I stop, shimmering as they fly away in a wide circle that will bring them back later, after I'm gone.

First Frost

Late, late, mid-October and only now the cold begins to come. White lines trace the grain of boards on the porch and the grass is hoary, a beard turned abruptly grey.

Overhead the sky is cloudless, blue, blue, and five crows wheel overhead, harbingers of the dawn, inscribing their aerial prophecy in looping words I cannot read.

The rising sun, obscured behind a steel seamed roof, gleams on the leading edge of their wings, bright, bright, as if new-sprung from the forge of heaven and not yet quenched.

Swallow Dance

Today the swallows flock above the hayfield,

a cloud of them

flitting and darting and gliding to the end of the field and back again,

rising and falling,

swirling and circling,

such grace and energy, such speed and acrobatics

that our eyes

are fooled

and cannot see

the thousand insects

hatching

and rising

into the mouth of August.

March 17 Notes

one day I will have a daughter and she will try to make sense of it all.

later she is next to me on the porch and our fingers hem the sky at the root, watch as it blossoms into chrysanthemum, petunia, shades of flax canvassing the earth.

lately I've been taking pills for the ruse in my chest. a girl in a hemlock dress confuses me for reeds. how empty skin looks under the guise of shadow.

in the lazy canyon, rock forms in stratospheres, there's a way to clutch a stone so tight that her granite fuses into skin and her label becomes a name, warm and heavy with meaning.

on the trail — two stones perfectly connected.

I think of the world eloped, a gravity of meditation and christmas stars, fallen onto the branches of each pine.

I think of a harmony of little footprints on stepping stones. rushing water licking imprints away.

there is a way to press leaves to the cheek so that it feels of skin. I have gathered river stones, tossing them off an edge of white.

one by one they become eggs, birds in falling flight, a quiet girl melting back into stone.

Family of Weasels

On last night's news I heard of an engineer named K_____ who invented the microchip and changed our lives. How the chip now contains a billion circuits which I still don't get but what I do perceive is this engineer's (a man modest in pride, fame and wealth) achievement of Teilhard de Chardin's vision of a world that is one organism and a single-minded mankind.

Also mentioned were Edison, the Wrights and Ford, oddly not Einstein, Galileo, Copernicus, Newton, Hamilton or Jefferson, Christ or Buddha, or the unknown gatherers and traders who invented agriculture, money.
8,000 generations and each individual an experiment gone well or wrong, a chance to respond with love or grief to the universe's effort to extinguish us.

Family of weasels, young ones playful.
One reference says they're vicious murderers, killing for sport. Absurd, I think, in the wild.
Another clarifies they eat 1/2 their body weight daily, extremely active, high metabolism, hunt all their caloric needs before eating. And, like the raccoon, ferocious defenders of their young.

Where I'm From, #2

It's the spot
I've only just left, imprints unfolding up from the grass and leaves, that opening, there,

a little less light than full day sun, or out here in the field flatness, trailhead, and before that whatever was canopied, where a nose full of Hemlock led the way, and before, a climb,

mud

slogged but not impossible, for here we stand
speaking of it,
of when boots were fresh,

when morning
was the stone door tread, needle floor and hammock hitch, and before, a kind of slumber: but careful, for where I'm from possesses the means of never letting go.

Process

It's a winter class, a seminar on the metaphysics of poetry and three maintenance men are outside raking the leaves.

I'm distracted from our class instruction by the metaphors offered by the men's hands as they work past the fogged window, by what I can hear, sounds of tools and laughter.

They pull at the half-brown, snow-spotted, leaf-lined grass with their rakes in time with each other, lifting their quarry, pressing the already rotting humus into barrels, pressing it down, compressing harder with each lift, turn, delivery, the barrel heavier as each man contributes and forces another layer, a lesson in the patience of archaeological layering of which only the barrel can know how long it will handle.

With enough pressure, with whatever may happen after today, a falling of ton after ton of leaves and rains, snow and drought, the fall of man even, when civilizations rise once again and others come

*

to dig in this place and study poetry again, or rake leaves on lightly cool winter days, only to find skeletons frozen there in the ground, tools or books in hand, gloved, neon hats, safety glasses adorned, all of it rock hardening to dark strips of coal, will they want what they find in the ground and burn it up as we do, or simply rake us all up out of curiosity and fill in the hole.

Contributor's Notes

Gale Acuff has had poetry published in Worcester Review, Florida Review, South Carolina Review, Carolina Quarterly, and many other journals and has authored three books of poetry: Buffalo Nickel (BrickHouse Press, 2004), The Weight of the World (BrickHouse, 2006), and The Story of My Lives (BrickHouse, 2008).

Richard Brobst was born and resides in Sarasota, FL. He is an advocate for animal rights and worked as co-editor of Albatross for many years.

Mike Dillon lives in Indianola, Washington, a small town on Puget Sound northwest of Seattle. He is the author of four books of poetry, including That Which We Have Named, from Bellowing Ark Press (2008) and three books of haiku.

Jerome Gagnon lives in Northern CA where he works as a teacher and freelance journalist. He has an M.A. in English/Creative Writing from San Francisco State U. Recent work appears in Crab Creek Review, Roaring Muse, and several anthologies. Info at jeromegagnonblog.wordpress.com.

Henry Goldkamp has lived in major cities along the Mississippi River his entire life. Recent work appears in Mudfish, Blood Orange Review, Sierra Nevada Review, Permafrost, and others. His public art projects have been covered by Time and NPR.

Vincent Hao is an aspiring writer who attends high school in Austin, Texas. His work has been published in Anomaly, Adroit, Soundings East, Blood Orange, River Styx, and has previously appeared in Albatross.

Cody Kucker has poems most recently appearing in JuxtaProse, The Opiate, and CALLIOPE. He received his MFA from the University of Alaska Fairbanks and currently lives and teaches high school English in Haverhill, Massachusetts.

Judith Ann Levison is of Micmic descent and was raised in a logger's family on the Maine coast. She was first pub'd in The New Yorker at age 15 as Judi Croxford. Her MFA is from Hollins University, and she has two chapbooks of poetry: Oak Leaves and Sand Castle.

Gary Metras has two new books of poems: White Storm (Presa Press, Feb. 2018) and Captive in the Here (Cervena Barva Press, July 2018), and in April he was chosen as the first Poet Laureate of Easthampton, MA. He is also the editor and letterpress printer of ayaz daryl nielsen is a veteran, former hospice nurse, ex-roughneck (as on oil rigs) and lives in Longmont, Colorado. He is editor of Bear Creek Haiku (26+ years/135+ issues) and has poetry published worldwide.

Stephen Reilly presently works as a staff writer for The Englewood Sun, a daily newspaper with circulation in southwest Florida.

John Timothy Robinson holds a Regent's Degree where he minored in Studio Art Printmaking. He is a ten-year educator for Mason County Schools in WV. He is a published poet with many poems pub'd in addition to his art work.

David Rogers has poems and stories published in Bryant Literary Review, Atlanta Review, and The Comstock Review, among others, and has authored the novel D. B. Cooper Is Dead: A Solomon Starr Adventure. He has lived in the cave region of Kentucky for over twenty-five years.

Robert Ronnow has two recent poetry collections: New and Selected Poems: 1975-2005 (Barnwood Press, 2007) and Communicating the Bird (Broken Publications, 2012). His website is www.ronnowpoetry.com.

Richard Smyth earned his Ph.D. in English from the University of Florida. He has poems in Southern Poetry Review, Tampa Review, Kansas Quarterly, and others. He edits and publishes Albatross.

Dana Stamps II has a B.A. in Psychology from Cal State U of San Bernardino, and has a chapbook For Those Who Will Burn (Partisan Press, 2016). His recent pubs include Slant, Main Street Rag, and Plainsongs.

Larry D. Thacker has poems in over a hundred publications including Poetry South, The Southern Poetry Anthology, and Mojave River Review. His books include the poetry books Drifting in Awe, Voice Hunting, Memory Train, and the forthcoming full collections Feasts of Evasion and Grave Robber Confessional. His MFA was earned from West Virginia Wesleyan College. Visit his website at: www.larrydthacker.com Don Thompson has lived in the southern San Joaquin Valley for most of his life. He has published a dozen books and chapbooks of poetry. Visit his website San Joaquin Ink (don-e-thompson.com) for more info.

Tim Wolfe holds an M.A. in Creative Writing from Dartmouth College. He currently lives in central Vermont.

And I had done a hellish thing And it would work 'em woe:
For all averred, I had killed the bird That made the breeze to blow.
Ah wretch! said they, the bird to slay,
That made the breeze to blow!

—Samuel Taylor Coleridge

The Anabiosis Press
2 South New Street
Bradford, MA 01835
www.anabiosispress.org

